

RESEARCHES IN THE SUPREME COURT.

In the present article we do not propose to deal with the official aspect of the High Court of Judicature of New South Wales. We are content here to believe that that solemn tribunal ministers law, and that that law is justice. Our objection is to deal entirely with the Temple where the proceedings, and to consider how far the accommodation for the public is such as to make the temple a place "creditable to the colony." And, without blemish about the bush, that accommodation may with perfect truth be briefly described as unfair, inconvenient, and discreditable. Some people have described the Supreme Court buildings as a rookery, but that description is unfair to the roofs. These spacious roofs select a suitable position for their tenants, and the tenants select a suitable room for their accommodations, comfortable and suited to their wants. The reverse may be said for the Supreme Court buildings. As a matter of fact these began in a middle; they have been in a middle ever since, and they are in a middle now. For how much longer public opinion is to be abused no one can tell, but surely the reason why matters have been so grossly neglected hitherto must be that We have said that the present buildings were commenced in a minute. That statement is proved by an account of their conversation taken from the Australian Advertiser of 18th January 1852, which reads as follows:

On the arrival in the colony of Mr. Commissioner Eggar, the architect, Mr. Greenway laid before him the plan of the proposed church, and explained the reasons which induced, and appraised a duty to lay the foundation stone, which ceremony was accordingly performed by the Governor (Macquarie). In a few weeks, however, the Government decided to erect a new building for the purpose of the erection of the Court-house, which had just before received his sanction and high commendation, was committed to the architect, who was then engaged in the construction of a church—namely, the present Church of St. James. This deviation from the original intention was earnestly remonstrated against by the architect, whose views were also shared by the clergy, and the Government, after much serious thought, or was persuaded to think, otherwise, and to direct the church to be built according to a plan laid out by the architect, and which was approved by the southern settlements; but on his return to Sydney he began to regret that having deprived the gentlemen of the colony of their much desired Court-house, and assuming anxious to give the Government the best of the ground, he prepared a plan for converting a part of the ground hospital, then occupied by the late Dr. Redfern, into Court-house, which was accordingly completed, and approved of by the Governor. In a very short time after this, however, the oscillating mind of the Commissioner was again changed, and the plan for a Court-house had been commenced by Governor Macquarie during the absence of the Commissioner, and was originally intended to be a public school house, to be called "The Sydney School House." The Commissioner, however, ultimately fixed for a Court-house. He personally, with the architect, methodized the plan, and directed, in order to save time, that the plan for the school-house should be the figure of the Doric order should be added, and the interior supported by columns of the same description. The plan was determined on, and the work had made considerable progress, when the Commissioner was ordered to leave the colony when Major Drutt, then acting-governor, before anxious to gratify his Excellency, directed the roof to be raised, and the building to be finished, in order to have support for the consequences of which were afterwards felt in the many alterations and additions which the building has since undergone. The Commissioner then returned after this period, Major Ovens arrived in the colony, and received the appointment of civil engineer. A Board of Works was formed—Mr. Greenway acting as civil engineer, and Mr. Ovens as treasurer. The Board was directed that no one should interfere with duties, and that no men as he might require to carry, is designs into effect should be furnished on application to the engineer in the entablature—taking out the tie-beams, and mutilating the covering of the World's Fair, and thousands of pounds were expended in the construction of the building. It was shortly after gave way, and it was uncalculated to be secured with iron work in a most hovel manner, and by the sale of partitions in such a way as only added to the weight on the upper floors. The building, however, was not brought down by the weight of the iron, which was not large enough to afford room for the Judges, jury, counsel, &c., without leaving space, as should have been done in a rising column like this, for at least six hundred tons of iron, and the weight of the building was not money, labour, and time, by full two-thirds, than would have carried the original design, together with that of the Metropolitan Church, into effect in the first instance. And in consequence of this unwise interference with the public safety, the Government have been obliged to issue an order to induce the Governor to be made a party in matters respecting which he evidently was not competent to form any just notion, as was proved by the result, while we are told that the Government have been obliged to employ the architect, says it well known, the authorities of the public. It has already, he states, taken as much as labour, and money to patch up the building as would a Court-house as would have sufficed, under the direction of the architect, to have been built for the purpose of the Government to the purpose for which it was, intended.

ornament to the town."

One mistake is the omission of the fact, that although the building was not intended to be a permanent one, it was, from the moment well, it was impossible to form any idea of its internal accommodation, inasmuch as the architect had no opportunity of seeing the ground on which the building was to be erected. This awkwardness was removed ultimately in the construction of a rotunda outside the building which not only gives it the appearance externally of a highly important building, but also affords a means of access to the interior.

Some dozen years or so ago it occurred to the power that, whereas the building was a little unsightly and a little inconvenient. Accordingly, somebody took it into his head to demolish the building and erect a new one, which was to be situated on the same site, and the conditions that were so justly described at the time.

The Supreme Court in King-street is receiving an addition to its accommodation, and the building which it requires their attendance in the vicinity of the building. The arcade with which the old building is being fronted will shortly be completed. The space between the arcade will be filled up with the new building, and the old building will be demolished. This alteration forms quite a prominent feature in this part of the city, but it is to be hoped that so much of the point of view of the city will be preserved, and that the new building will be got rid of by harmonising the old building in some way or other, whether it be by subduing the where as doubly duty to perform. That the Court-rooms are small, poor, and improvement follows as a matter of course; the few, noble proportions, are distinguished by the simplicity of the seditary, the propriety, and the furniture as a pervading appearance and feel of human grandeur.

So much for the two main Court-rooms. But there are two more on the ground floor which claim attention. The first is the "Inquest Room," which is a room in which it is prohibited on the notice board by some of the grain humanity to be "next St. James's Church." There is nothing peculiar about this room: it looks like any other, or a refuge for the destitute. The other room is at the end of the passage to the Equity and Chancery Courts, and it is always the purpose during the morning of the Judges' public chambers. This room is a small, little place, and its arrangements are still more unimproving. iron and steel exports. Taking the total, it may be said in a sentence that where two years ago we went out over $2,000,000 worth of iron and in 1875 we went out $2,000,000 worth, in 1876, owing to the depression of the market, we did not export at all and lost quite $1,500,000 worth of iron and steel orders. At the same time we imported more both of iron ore and iron manufactures; but it is not to be told that we have not been able to get our iron and steel taken more of our crude iron during several months of the year. Germany, Spain, Italy, Brazil, and India have been during the year better customers for our iron and steel than we have been for some time or two of our smaller customers who have done our business with us. But Russia, the United States, and the others who were among our largest purchasers about the time the falling off in nearly all kinds of iron and steel goods, is, however, some consolation that one result of this continued depression of trade has been to remove the iron and steel from the hands of the smaller employment of our ironworks. During the period when the demand for iron, and more especially railroad iron, was at its highest, prices were forced to a point where it might be said that the iron and steel depressed some of the raw materials and of the normal rise in wages. Rates of wages are now as high as they were five years ago, and nearly every article of material has touched, or nearly touched, its former price. In consequence of the high prices of the crude or finished state, is now quoted at prices lower than have been known for years. We shall see as enabled when the demand for iron increases, compete better with foreigners; and since it was not a trade protection, that the minimum price was not a trade protection, it is now the order of the day. It is true that the stocks of pig iron in the hands of makers had reached the largest amount down for years in several of the centres; but the turn of the largest producing district show within a few months that the stocks were not so large as some of these stocks. And although there is as yet no sign of increased briskness in the manufacture of iron rails, yet it is tolerably well known that this is due in no degree to a growing preference for steel rails. In consequence of the high price of iron, the demand for the manufacture of rails, there is an unquestionable revival, which in turn materially affects the demand for pig iron of forge qualities. In the iron road district the tone of trade is more hopeful; and

and, therefore, its commercial value is unimpaired. The steady demand for its manufacture; in short, there is an evident if slight improvement in the prospects of trade, and more activity in the amount of work actually executed.
 In the last two or three months there has been no change in the attendance at prayer—rather the congregation, indeed; and as orders retreat from a falling market, and are more briskly thrown into an advancing one, it may be reasonably anticipated that the pressure in the iron trade, as a whole, has passed its deepest depths, and that every step now will be towards a sounder and steadier as well as an enlarged trade.

RITUALISTIC DISTURBANCES AT HATHAM.

(Abridged from the Times.)

Anticipation of a crowded attendance, and with a view of preventing interruption during the service at James's on Sunday morning, January 7, a barrier boards some five feet high, and fixed to stout posts of iron, was erected from the church to the entrance entirely across the foot of the road; it, indeed, the office, and for a time seemed likely to fulfil the object aired. On the boards were placards announcing admission was only to be obtained by tickets. The tickets were not given out until 9 o'clock, and no evening service. As early as 9 o'clock a crowd assembled and clamoured for admission, but as they were not provided with the authoritative cards which were given out, and commenced a disturbance which culminated in what was described as a serious riot. Mr. Superintendent Gemon, with a number of police-constables of the P Division were on duty in St. James's Road, at the top of the stairs, and the disturbance did not spread. Disorders occurred. The tickets not being available after 9 o'clock, the congregation and their friends who had been supplied with them assembled earlier than usual, and the doors were closed at 10 o'clock. The doors were closed, with several hundreds of both sexes, and the gates of the building were beset with applicants, but the regulations were strictly carried out, and at 11 o'clock the doors of the church were closed, barred, locked, and bolted.

the Church Association, and some of the more prominear the same neighborhood. Service commenced punctual at six o'clock, and some hundreds of persons had congregated outside the barrier in St. James's Road, and were discussing warmly and loudly the ritualistic practices then in the church, and the illegality of the action, which they maintained prevented them from exercising a right of way which they considered theirs. The singing of the particular hymn, "The shouting of the people outside," was distinctly heard by the congregation within, but it did not interfere with the service, and it proceeded as usual. On one of the front seats sat the choir boys, and behind them were half a dozen Sisters of Mercy in their habits. Most of the male congregation were in the stalls, at the ends of the pews as that in the choir aisle, and they could not see the altar, but the crowding of the seats, and a number of women, wearing armlets of white silk ribbon, were there to superintend the arrangements, under the orders of the churchwardens, Messrs. Croome and Hampton. The service was much the same as on previous Sundays. The Rev. Mr. Hogg, of St.

He wants that worship was. If people were asked why they were to worship Him, He would say, "I am God, and I want that worship." He would say it was to get good instruction, for prayer to God to get what they wanted from Him. Worship was no more the getting something by barter, buying or selling as. If men really worshipped God, God would give Him something, as men did when they worshipped the false gods. Men did. They presented myrrh because it was of His humanity, of His power, of His love of them, and of His willingness to die, of the sacrifice He made for them on the Cross; incense was the fragrance of His love; gold was the love of man to God, by which He was loved. They gave Him myrrh as men give to God, Gold they gave Him as we paid tribute as their king. Just as we paid tribute to kings on earth, so they gave tribute to Him. He did not want them to give tribute to Him. What was there that He desired of kings? What was there that He desired of men? What was there that He desired of God which was like gold in material things? It was offering of a loving heart; and worship could be thing unless it was a loving worship, with mortifications. It was a loving, faithful prayer and adoration. The substance was the heart.

more serious and untried subject, while was known as to how the practical for the second and third years was carried out. The discussions about this in the spring of 1875 - we are now at the of 1876. There have just been issued publications which show what has been taken by the London School Board matter, and these afford useful sugges-to other Boards throughout the country.
If there are official papers relating to instruction in cooking, and the third the "Scholar's Manual of Household ement," prepared at the request of the by Mr. W. B. Tegetmeier.

There are in London four "centres" at practical instruction is given by the of the "cookery" appointed by the Board, Mrs. Susan Mathewson, at Kent's South Road, at Cambridge Heath, and at East Street, Battersea. At the first two the full course of twenty lessons has been completed, and at the last two it is still progress. Enough has been done to show that it is difficult about practical work can be done. It may afford useful suggestions for other towns to describe one of these schools. We take Gleadford-street. The room is set up for the instruction of not more than fifty at a time. There are five rows of desks, raised one above another, so that all can see the view of the lecture table. Although there is a stove left in to the table, so that the heating of those things which need constant attention can be watched by the whole class, there has been taken to provide a small fire-place and a stove adapted for a man's house, so that it may not be supposed that it is needful to have more than a few appliances as are within the reach of the in the wage classes. The method of action is this: The teacher goes slowly through the subject of the lesson, stating the facts for what is being done, and asking questions of the girls to ascertain that they understand what they see and hear. The lesson is, in fact, a demonstration. After the teacher has been through the lesson, two girls are called to the table to work with fresh materials what they have seen. The teacher making constant appeals to the other girls whether they are going on to the next lesson. At the end of the two hours' lesson the girls that have been prepared are divided into two groups and handed round. The girls have to make notes during the lesson and to take them home. They are then left with the teacher for examination at the following lesson. Thus the girls gradually accumulate a manuscript book of their work.

a principles of cooking together with any thing in the book being within comprehension, as it is in their own words. A week is all that each girl is allowed, to present the works are not consecutive, but the one teacher at present appointed is to have successive detachments from different schools at the centre. In the evening attention is given to the schoolmistresses and teachers. Additional importance has since 1875 been attached to "domestic economy" as a subject, from the fact that by the revision of the Code, "after the 31st of March, 1877, every girl presented under this must take domestic economy as a sub-examination." A preliminary examination has been held on behalf of the Board, and report by Mrs. Buckmaster contains remarks very suggestive.

ON THE MOUNTAINS.—The Tass Courier relates that James Ramsey, of Nannam, recently purchased a salar run, which is situated about fifteen miles inland, on the Stacey River, and in the Monaro district. Mr. Ramsey has been told that there, if he takes the most likely place to obtain some grass for his cattle, low-lying lands, and parts shaded from the rays of the past summer's sun. However, after a few days' search, he found that the whole of the area was a thick mantle of snow, and saw a swelling of an above ground. The Excelsior, of course, had to descend, for unfortunately cattle cannot thrive upon it. We believe that such a mob of cattle, if driven whole, would have been driven to the ruin of another water nor grass there, and almost certainly it came of from the spring-pass to the fire, it was equally disastrous—from the torrid to the frigid.

THE PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S ANCESTRY.—The Edison Welles contributes to the January issue of the Library an article on the administration of Abraham Lincoln, which contains some interesting hitherto unpublished information about Lincoln's ancestry. This was a subject of which Lincoln was his own ignorance. In 1875 there died in John Winters, a Mrs. Lucy Porter, who resided at Franklin, Lincoln. Her father, John Winters, was born in 1742, and died in 1844. He emigrated from Berks county in Pennsylvania to Cumberland, now Lenoir county, in 1728. He and his wife had nineteen children, and there was an interval of two years between the birth of the first and that of the youngest child, of whom he married in 1748, in the sister town of Virginia, was Ann Boone, a daughter of Benjamin Boone, the Kentucky pioneer, and she had four sons and one daughter. Their daughter, Hannah, married Abraham Lincoln, father of the President, in Rockingham county, N. C. He emigrated to Kentucky, from which he came to his father-in-law in Pennsylvania, when he returned to his home in John Winters. Not long after leaving Lincoln was by the Indians, leaving a son 5 years old, who was the father of the President. William Winters and his wife, Elizabeth, were married in 1864, and their union were born three sons and five daughters. John Winters, who died less than two years the youngest. After the death of William this widow was licensed to keep a "house of mourning," where Williamsport now is. There she married a man from New York and reared her own large family and several of her children. Her daughters seem to have been fortunate in their marriages. The husbands of them became Justices of the Supreme Court of the state, and Lucy, the youngest, was the wife of Potter, who died Vice-President of Congress. She survived him thirty-seven years and left a widow. What is new in these facts is the notion of the Winters family with the Lincolns, and that was known to the President. Mr. Welles was not known to the President, and he has no doubt the authenticity of the facts, and the President has no doubt the paternal and maternal—Lincoln, Boone, and—Is to be traced to the county of Berks, in Pennsylvania.

or a year before announcing it. It is now, taken up by a company, and will be brought to market. It is situated in a rather inaccessible place, the California coast, a stage road passes within a few miles below. From this a little creek flows to the mine, which can be reached by mules. It is said that the pieces that are detached and fall into the sea dissolve, and that this fact has led to the use of this soap as described as marbled or particularly, like California soap. The extent of the mine is to be very great. The "soap" is in the form of alabaster and sandstone, and near it is a bed of gypsum which appears to have been upon the reef. The whole country round bears the marks of a volcanic action, and the mountains near the mine have been under the sea, and the marine products abound on their highest.

JENNIE'S LIGHT-BROWN COE LIVES ON.—All who know and attending the early years of childhood will be interested in the following notice of a child who is mentioned in the Medical Times.—In badly-nourished infants, the liver is enlarged, and the liver oil is invaluable. The following is a description of a child, six days old, with which two or three drops of the oil was administered, and which is astonishing. Children generally like the taste of
